How to Recover: Sore Muscles

Every dancer has those days where their muscles are sore from the day before and now they are back in rehearsal trying to lift their leg or arm and it feels like 100 pounds. Here are a few tools to help you recover but still staying in the studio...

Water is one of the most effective tools when healing sore muscles. After class you can be a bit dehydrated and drinking extra water can help keep you hydrated and flush out any lactic acid that has built up in your muscles.

A glass of low fat chocolate milk after your strenuous rehearsal can help the body to recover faster. This tasty treat gives your body the sugar it's missing, a little bit of protein, and some carbohydrates to allow your body to recover faster.

Massage, Massage, Massage! Allow yourself or a friend to massage those sore muscles.

Food is another great tool to help you recover. Make sure you are getting a balanced meal of lean proteins, carbohydrates and vegetables. Bananas, nuts, fruits, and veggies can go a long way in helping you feel better faster!

Even though it can be painful, make sure that you are warming up and stretching properly before and after class. Stretching extra might not feel great right away, but in the long run you will be glad you did!

Of course your biggest tool besides water is rest. Allow yourself to get a solid 8 hours of sleep at night and when you are out of class try to not do anything too strenuous.

Majorette Troupe to Compete in UK National Competition...

A majorette troupe will compete in the finals of a national competition after making it through a qualifying round.

Witham's Platinum Majorettes will head to the United Kingdom Federation of Majorettes finals.

Troupe leader Caroline Grogan said: "The girls were just ecstatic. They were so shocked, we all just started blubbing because we weren't expecting it."

Her co-leader Helen Yates said: "The girls were completely chuffed to bits, it was brilliant. We did it not expecting anything but we came away with quite a few wins."

To qualify, the girls aged 4-17, did baton solos, duos and also a baton group routine.

Touch of Gold Baton and Flag Teams...

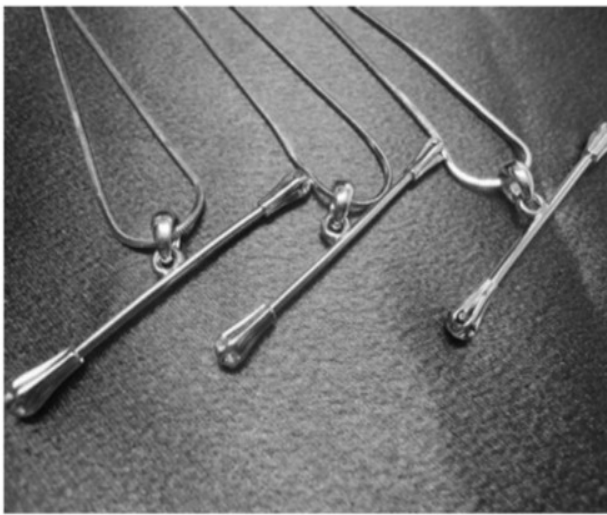

It's a grueling time for the Touch of Gold baton and flag teams in Curwensville, Pennsylvania – hours of practicing, making sure toes are pointed, batons are caught and smiles never waiver, at least for the few minutes while they're in routine. They look just like any other competitive group with their eyes on the gold, but what makes this team different is what you don't see.

Julie Benamati, founder and coach for the Touch of Gold baton and flag teams, had a passion for baton twirling when she was young. Knowing how expensive lessons, uniforms and membership fees can be, Benamati decided to start her own group years later and make it affordable. "This is a year-round commitment," said Benamati. "Our kids don't just twirl during parade season in the summer, they twirl all year round." "All 30 kids, trying to keep them in line is a lot but I think it's really rewarding to be a coach," said Touch of Gold baton coach Katy Galimberti. Benamati started the group in 2002, but it wasn't until 2006 when she and her co-director Mike White decided to make their performances competitive.

"To watch them go out onto the floor and just perform their hearts out for the judges with the applause saying we did it," said White. They travel throughout Pennsylvania and surrounding states to compete. They even go as far away as Florida. All of it made possible through the contests they host. And while they have dozens of trophies and titles to prove their hard work is paying off, what these girls are really taking away has nothing to do with awards. "I was super shy when I was little, so my parents got me to join when I was little and I've learned to open up a lot," said Touch of Gold baton twirler Julie Stillman. "Performing in front of crowds was really nerve-racking but I learned to get over my fear of being in front of people and it's fun," said Touch of Gold flag twirler Allison Hoover.

Wheaton Twirl Team Aims High in NBTA World Competition

the complex has a pickup basketball game - all expect one court where about 20 baton twirlers are putting the finishing touches on routines that are taking them to a world championship in Italy.

The Wheaton Dance Twirl team is heading to Lignano, Italy for the World Federation of National Baton Twirling Associations championship in a few weeks. The group has qualified in several team level competitions and individual events.

Coach Annie Kennedy said the group has been working hard to return to the world event - they qualified three years ago the last time it was held.

TU Cancer Competition Fundraiser Dozens of dancers, baton twirlers and models gathered at Maysville High School Sunday to twirl for a cause.

Performers ages 3 to 18 participated in the Twirlers Unlimited Competition. Director, Pat Payne, who has been involved in the competition for 31 years, says many styles are entered each year.

"All kinds of twirling and all kinds of dancing, and we give refurbished trophies, my husband re-does the trophy's every year and there was a man this year who brought in 200 those will be used for next year," said Payne.

The American Cancer Society receives all money raised from Sunday's competition.
